Criminal

David is a specialist criminal barrister who has developed and maintained a heavyweight criminal practice made up of predominantly defence work. He is regularly instructed in the most serious and high-profile criminal cases including many trials that have been well-publicised over the years.

David is in great demand and is often approached to become involved at the earliest possible stage in order to get the fullest benefit of his advice and also to secure his availability going forward. By way of example, he was asked to represent the Manchester United footballer Mason Greenwood before the case had even been brought before the court.

Once a case reaches trial, his meticulous preparation is clearly apparent and he provides courtroom advocacy of the highest order. The client will receive first-class representation that will ensure he/she has the best possible chance of success before a jury. His record of securing acquittals in trials – often against the weight of the evidence – quite simply reflects this.

Whilst he largely acts for defendants, his abilities have been recognised by the prosecuting authorities and he has been instructed to prosecute significant cases for both the CPS and the Serious Organised Crime Agency at times as lead counsel. Further, he is also a Category 4 CPS Prosecutor (the highest level) and is on the specialist list of approved counsel to be instructed to prosecute trials involving charges of rape and other serious sexual offences.

Whether dealing with professional or non-professional clients, David's personable manner and style inspires trust and confidence in the people he represents and his effectiveness in court is well recognised by both judges and juries.
